veraPDF - Open Source PDF/A Validator https://openpreservation.org/products/verapdf/veraPDF is the first complete, open source PDF/A validator. The software is sustained and maintained by the Open Preservation Foundation. Dual Lab provides active user support and carries out maintenance and bug fixes. The PDF Association's PDF Validation Technical Working Group continues in its role resolving ambiguities arising from veraPDF's usage in the field, and promoting the adoption of PDF/A and veraPDF by developers worldwide. veraPDF is open source, free to download, to use and to modify. However, it is not free to host, maintain, support or develop. veraPDF is a widely-used digital preservation tool, but currently, only OPF members support veraPDF financially as part of their membership fees. If you use veraPDF, please consider supporting its development by becoming an OPF member or making a donation towards development. veraPDF is the first complete open source PDF/A validator, covering all parts of the PDF/A standards. It comprises four components: 1) An implementation checker, which validates all parts and conformance levels of the PDF/A specifications; 2) A policy checker, which allows users to implement additional custom checks to enforce institutional policy beyond the PDF/A specifications; 3) A reporter, which processes the results, producing both human-readable and machine-parsable reports; and 4) A metadata fixer, which repairs metadata in files based on conformance with the standard. The software is accompanied by a comprehensive, atomic test corpus, covering each clause in the PDF/A specifications. VeraPDF is implemented as a Java application and is usable on any Unix, Windows, or OS X platform with appropriate Java installation. veraPDF was originally developed with funding from the PREFORMA project (2014-2017). In 2018, it was a finalist for the Digital Preservation Awards 2018 in the Software Sustainability

Apache Guacamole™
https://guacamole.apache.org/Apache Guacamole is a clientless remote desktop gateway. It supports standard protocols like VNC, RDP, and SSH. They call it clientless because no plugins or client software are required. Thanks to HTML5, once Guacamole is installed on a server, all you need to access your desktops is a web browser.Features include: a) Access your computers from anywhere - Because the Guacamole client is an HTML5 web application, use of your computers is not tied to any one device or location. As long as you have access to a web browser, you have access to your machines; b) Keep your desktop in the cloud - Desktops accessed through Guacamole need not physically exist. With both Guacamole and a desktop operating system hosted in the cloud, you can combine the convenience of Guacamole with the resilience and flexibility of cloud computing; c) Free and open source - Apache Guacamole is and will always be free and open source software. It is licensed under the Apache License, Version 2.0, and is actively maintained by a community of developers that use Guacamole to access their own development environments. They feel this sets us apart from other remote desktop solutions, and gives us a distinct advantage; d) Built on a well-documented API - Apache Guacamole is built on its own stack of core APIs which are thoroughly documented, including basic tutorials and conceptual overviews in the online manual. These APIs allow Guacamole to be tightly integrated into other applications, whether they be open source or proprietary; and e) Commercially supported - For enterprises, dedicated commercial support is also available through third party companies. SwiftStack Data Platform - Platform for Intelligent Data and Enables Deep Learning at Ultra-Scale https://www.swiftstack.com/
At SwiftStack, we are working with industry-leading enterprises who require new platforms to store and leverage data. Services core to their business are collecting and storing more data, while data is being processed in new ways by applications running from edge to core to cloud. The SwiftStack data storage and management platform simplifies your on-premises infrastructure while enabling limitless scale of performance and capacity, helps increase the utilization level of data, and allows you to take incremental steps on your journey towards cloud. Features include: a) Collapse storage silos - With the ability to seamlessly scale across multiple geographic regions and provide applications high-performance access to the same set of data using object APIs or file protocols, workflows can modernize while reducing infrastructure complexity across one or more data centers; b) Utilize petabytes of data - SwiftStack allows applications to discover and utilize tens of terabytes to hundreds of petabytes of data in a single namespace. For modern, cloud-native applications, the use of metadata provides a powerful way to discover, access, and control data. For traditional applications, buckets of data can be presented as a hierarchical file system for broad compatibility; and c) Move data seamlessly - SwiftStack 1space brings transparent access to data across edge devices, private data centers, and public clouds, allowing applications the ability to leverage unique services across no matter where the data lives at rest. Workloads now become portable and policies only move data when required, saving cost and time. This will be added to WWWReference Subject Tracer™. Huginn is a system for building agents that perform automated tasks for you online. They can read the web, watch for events, and take actions on your behalf. Huginn's Agents create and consume events, propagating them along a directed graph. Think of it as a hackable version of IFTTT or Zapier on your own server. You always know who has your data. You do. Here are some of the things that you can do with Huginn: 1)Track the weather and get an email when it's going to rain (or snow) tomorrow ("Don't forget your umbrella!"); 2) List terms that you care about and receive email when their occurrence on Twitter changes. (For example, want to know when something interesting has happened in the world of Machine Learning? Huginn will watch the term "machine learning" on Twitter and tell you when there is a spike in discussion.); 3) Watch for air travel or shopping deals; 4) Follow your project names on Twitter and get updates when people mention them; 5) Scrape websites and receive email when they change; 6) Connect to Adioso, HipChat, Basecamp, Growl, FTP, IMAP, Jabber, JIRA, MQTT, nextbus, Pushbullet, Pushover, RSS, Bash, Slack, StubHub, translation APIs, Twilio, Twitter, Wunderground, and Weibo, to name a few; 7) Send digest email with things that you care about at specific times during the day; 8) Track counts of high frequency events and send an SMS within moments when they spike, such as the term "san francisco emergency"; 9) Send and receive WebHooks; 10) Run custom JavaScript or CoffeeScript functions; 11) Track your location over time; and 12) Create Amazon Mechanical Turk workflows as the inputs, or outputs, of agents (the Amazon Turk Agent is called the "HumanTaskAgent"). For example: "Once a day, ask 5 people for a funny cat photo; send the results to 5 more people to be rated; send the top-rated photo to 5 people for a funny caption; send to 5 final people to rate for funniest caption; finally, post the best captioned photo on my blog." https://www.elastic.co/elasticsearch/Elasticsearch is a distributed, RESTful search and analytics engine capable of addressing a growing number of use cases. As the heart of the Elastic Stack, it centrally stores your data for lightning fast search, fine-tuned relevancy, and powerful analytics that scale with ease. 7.6 brings performance improvements to Elasticsearch, end-to-end supervised machine learning capabilities to the stack, & more. Elasticsearch lets you perform and combine many types of searches — structured, unstructured, geo, metric — any way you want. Start simple with one question and see where it takes you. It's one thing to find the 10 best documents to match your query. But how do you make sense of, say, a billion log lines? Elasticsearch aggregations let you zoom out to explore trends and patterns in your data. This will be added to Script Resources Subject Tracer™. This will be added to WWWReference Subject Tracer™. Digital Inequalities In Time of Pandemic: COVID-19 Exposure Risk Profiles and New Forms of Vulnerability https://doi.org/10.5210/fm.v25i7.10845

Abstract:
In this article, we argue that new kinds of risk are emerging with the COVID-19 virus, and that these risks are unequally distributed. As we expose to view, digital inequalities and social inequalities are rendering certain subgroups significantly more vulnerable to exposure to COVID-19. Vulnerable populations bearing disproportionate risks include the social isolated, older adults, penal system subjects, digitally disadvantaged students, gig workers, and last-mile workers. Therefore, we map out the intersection between COVID-19 risk factors and digital inequalities on each of these populations in order to examine how the digitally resourced have additional tools to mitigate some of the risks associated with the pandemic. We shed light on how the ongoing pandemic is deepening key axes of social differentiation, which were previously occluded from view. These newly manifested forms of social differentiation can be conceived along several related dimensions. At their most general and abstract, these risks have to do with the capacity individuals have to control the risk of pathogen exposure. In order to fully manage exposure risk, individuals must control their physical environment to the greatest extent possible in order to prevent contact with potentially compromised physical spaces. In addition, they must control their social interactional environment to the greatest extent possible in order to minimize their contacts with potentially infected individuals. All else equal, those individuals who exercise more control over their exposure risk — on the basis of their control over their physical and social interactional environments — stand a better chance of staying healthy than those individuals who cannot manage exposure risk. Individuals therefore vary in terms of what we call their COVID-19 exposure risk profile (CERPs). CERPs hinge on preexisting forms of social differentiation such as socioeconomic status, as individuals with more economic resources at their disposal can better insulate themselves from exposure risk. Alongside socioeconomic status, one of the key forms of social differentiation connected with CERPs is digital (dis)advantage. Ceteris paribus, individuals who can more effectively digitize key parts of their lives enjoy better CERPs than individuals who cannot digitize these life realms. Therefore we believe that digital inequalities are directly and increasingly related to both life-or-death exposure to COVID-19, as well as excess deaths attributable to the larger conditions generated by the pandemic.
