Project: Social Buzz Bot 2021 – The Business and Social Intelligence Search Engine for Information Discovery from Social Communities
http://www.SocialBuzzBot.com/
Description: The Social Buzz Bot (SSB) is a highly structured search bot utilizing cloud computing with a grid of 50,000+ computers within the cloud. Our unique distributed architecture stitches together computers from all around the world to deliver exceptional bot crawling performance. We currently have the capability to crawl two billion+ pages per day. The niched part of our project is to have available current awareness curated business and social intelligence information with regards to the various significant and not so significant (where many memes are born) social communities and related applications and sites. The Social Buzz Bot will give the small entrepreneurial startup, medium size business and large scale enterprise business networks the capability to receive current awareness happenings in the social community environs and to use that business intelligence to make decisions that will aid the overall performance and direction of the business in today's new and exponentially growing social economy.

Awarenesswatch™ Paper Review

Chief Information Officers' (CIO) Perceptions About Artificial Intelligence – A Comparative Study of Implications and Challenges for the Public Sector by J.Ignacio, Rodrigo Sandoval-Almazan, David Valle-Cruz and Edgar A. Ruvalcaba-Gomez
https://firstmonday.org/ojs/index.php/fm/article/view/10648

Abstract:
This article presents a study about artificial intelligence (AI) policy based on the perceptions, expectations, and challenges/opportunities given by chief information officers (CIOs). In general, publications about AI in the public sector relies on experiences, cases, ideas, and results from the private sector. Our study stands out from the need of defining a distinctive approach to AI in the public sector, gathering primary (and comparative) data from different countries, and assessing the key role of CIOs to frame federal/national AI policies and strategies. This article reports three research questions, including three dimensions of analysis: (1) perceptions regarding to the concept of AI in the public sector; (2) expectations about the development of AI in the public sector; and, (3) challenges and opportunities of AI in the public sector. This exploratory study presents the results of a survey administered to federal/national ministerial government CIOs in ministries of Mexico and Spain. Our descriptive statistical (and exploratory) analysis provides an overall approach to our dimensions, exploratory answering the research questions of the study. Our data supports the existence of different governance models and policy priorities in different countries. Also, these results might inform research in this same area and will help senior officials to assess the national AI policies actually in process of design and implementation in different national/federal, regional/state, and local/municipal contexts.
