A Magic Quadrant for the Decentralised Web (DWeb) by Tom Barbereau and Balazs Bodo

<https://firstmonday.org/ojs/index.php/fm/article/view/14701/12429>

Abstract

This paper examines two binary oppositions that are commonly deployed by proponents of blockchains and other decentralised Web (DWeb) technologies: centralisation versus decentralisation and trust versus trustlessness. According to optimistic visions, DWeb technologies empower individuals to exchange resources on an unsupervised, peer-to-peer level. This reduces the need for “centralisation” and trusted intermediaries. DWeb proponents’ speculative claims are often disseminated via social media, business, and technology blogs. In response, we offer a magic quadrant. The quadrant covers unconventional, DWeb-based organisations that are expected to govern “alt-tech” social networks, shadow markets, and metaverse projects. The quadrant also illustrates attempts by various parties to make the DWeb a reality. Next to the quadrant, we offer possible theoretical lenses to approach the DWeb.
